Articles (commissioned / published writing)

As a result of publishing an incredibly popular award winning blog in 2010 (unbeknownst to me) I have been invited to write a variety of articles. The roles and responsibilities were varied; from attending events and writing reports, creating toolkits and guidance for artists, conducting interviews, analysing data and research, working to strict deadlines and writing fluidly and in an understandable yet intelligent tone with a considered angle whether in presenting a story, toolkit or report.

Primary and Secondary School Education Examples

2009-Current

The Tower of London, Historic Royal Palaces

I have worked with HRP on a series of freelance projects exploring and engaging students with the history of The Tower of London using the Tower of London as a base for exploring not only creative expression but also history, geometry and numeracy, literacy, history, cultural identity and architecture. Projects include a collaborative 3d Tower of London Model, a 4 week family interactive set of art exercises as well as drop in family workshops.

Education and Learning Officer. Tower of London

'It is a pleasure to work with such a professional artist who engages really well with students.'

Stephen Lawrence Charitable Trust, London

2008-10

Teaching a range of experimental drawing, embroidery, painting, 3d and print techniques to both primary and secondary students using the architecture of the Stephen Lawrence Centre as a starting point. Themes explored were identity, environment and community. I also ran a four week workshop developing students work for an exhibition alongside my own work in order to give goals as well as to develop confidence.
