Foreword

As a lad family holidays were at the seaside. Aside from donkey rides and amusement arcades my enduring memories are of flying kites on the beach, looking out over an uninterrupted horizon.

Leap forward forty odd years and I left London to live in Bexhill-on-Sea. A small town on the East Sussex coast, it has an unassuming manner which belies its rich history and charm. The photographs in this book attempt to distil the essence of that allure. For me, words alone are not enough.

Bexhill-on-Sea. Home to the De La Warr Pavilion, birthplace of British Motor racing; and over all, rather pleasant.

Low tide. Autumn.

*Sun fingers part clouds,
Soft light kisses low tide sands.
A Collonade glows...
London fades from memory.
What else could any man desire ?*
